PRESIDENT'S FLYBOX

SCOTT OLSON

"... being splashed with the equivalent of ice cold water ..."

GETTING LOOPY

I've been fly fishing for decades now and consider myself relatively proficient at the sport. Recently, however, I was fortunate to attend a clinic on intermediate fly casting hosted by the Pasadena club where I was disabused of some of my preconceived notions on my abilities.

There is nothing so shocking than being splashed with the equivalent of ice cold water by a casting expert. I've always considered myself above average with the old graphite stick, but I was quickly set straight by the firm, yet friendly, instruction of my betters. In my case it's the overpowering of the stroke on my forward cast. A "skill" it took decades to master and it appears may take just as long to break. I'm invoking the "old dog" maxim here.

For those of us who have been at this awhile it can always be valuable to have an independent observer, who is only interested in your improvement, try to iron out some of the kinks in our strokes. And for those of you just entering in to our august sport I highly recommend not only seeking out professionals to enhance your skills, but to also practice them religiously until they become second nature. You will certainly see and experience the benefits each time you go fishing.

Tight lines and fighting fish to all!

Scott Olson, Conejo Valley Fly Fishers, President

Confessions of Fly Fishing Junkie

Maybe five years ago I concluded that my nymphing technique needed some work, if not a complete overhaul. I committed to being a student of the style we call "Nymphing".

I have found it to be extremely effective but have made some changes to the gear I carry. All this reconstruction has led me to re think my fly box too. I have this theory that if we can present effectively a fly that is close to the hatch of the day, but different enough than anything the resident and pressured trout have seen then the fish will commit to the strike.

I've been fishing some unfamiliar water the last two years. One of the first steps I take when in unfamiliar water, and is to turn over rocks. I am finding that most of the flies I have in my boxes look nothing like what's under the rocks. There is a time and place for attractor patterns but for me, but for my journey I am trying to simplify my offerings and really put the effort into the actual presentation.

My goal, by no means complete is to fish simple patterns at an expert level. Here is a pattern that's simple to tie and easy to configure to imitate several species of insects.

This fly is a hook, a bead, black thread, black wire, optional lead wire and some spanfelx. Spanfelx is stretchy thin leg material made by Wapsi.

I like this pattern because I can simply change the Spanflex colors from tan to brown to black to green and reasonably imitate most of the critters I am finding under rocks. You could probably tie up several of these in tan and just carry felt tip markers in black, brown and green to match what you are seeing under the rocks. (continued, next page)

I like the Masu K3 hooks in a 16, they are without barb and have an extra wide gap between the shank and tip. They are plenty sharp out of the bag but I carry a small whetstone and use it frequently. For beads I like the tungsten.

Here's a step by step of how I created this particular fly. Next time you see me, ask how this is working out as I am sure there will be various evolutions.

Hope to see you soon,

Protect Pier Fishing – Report Unlawful Local Regulations!

Today, California ranks dead last in fishing participation, despite its vast coastline and thousands of lakes and rivers. This is unacceptable, and illegal regulations are a contributing factor! Please report local abuse by providing us the name of the municipality that is limiting access, gear and manner of take, and provide copies of the regulations or ordinances to info@savefishing.com.

Like the City of Manhattan Beach, local government has been known to limit fishing gear and manner of take, or have imposed outright fishing bans! Together, we can grow access and increase participation in one of California's favorite pastimes, recreational fishing. Thank you for your assistance. READ MORE

TOP 5 CALIFORNIA DAMS OUT. - CalTrout's report highlights five dams that are ripe for removal and that must, for the health of the ecosystem and communities around them, come out.

THE RECONNECT HABITAT INITIATIVE - Reconnecting Habitat is one of CalTrout's key initiatives in its effort to return native fish to resilience. Removing barriers to fish passage and getting obsolete dams out are the key objectives. Read more

✓ Trout Tips: The ABCs of winter trout fishing

As Umpqua's Russ Miller points out below, there are different holding lies for trout in the dead of winter. Trout aren't likely to spend as much time moving about and chasing food as they are in secure, deeper waters where food is essentially delivered to them by the current. - Vimeo Video
